CARL ANDERSON'S

HENRY

"Are you going to shoot off fireworks for the 4th of July, Daddy?" Rinky asked hopefully, as his father galloped up to the Circle-O's blacksmith shop.

"No, I'm afraid not, Rinky. We won't have any time this year. I'm mighty worried about the cattle. This drought has made them ornery!" Rinky's father said, as he slid wearily out of his dusty saddle.

"But, Daddy, you've already bought a lot of rockets and pinwheels and . . ." Rinky said excitedly.

"Never mind, Rinky! This drought is a very serious thing. If we shot off fireworks while the herd is so edgy, it might start a bad stampede!" Father growled. Rinky's father and the other Circle-O cowhands had been working long extra hours watching the lowing cattle. It had been hard work just keeping them from charging blindly through the Circle-O's fences.

All year Rinky had been looking forward to the big 4th of July celebration. He loved to watch the skyrockets zoom high in the air and burst into sparkling riots of color.

"Gee, I sure will miss all the fun!" Rinky mumbled. His father, tired and overworked, turned and glared at Rinky.

"Rinky, I've got more important things to do than spend my time shooting off firecrackers! Now I don't want to hear another word about them again!" Father said sternly.

Just then, Big Jeff, cook on the Circle-O, came out of the bunkhouse carrying several large, empty cartons. He threw them in a pile a safe distance from the blacksmith's shop. Father walked over as Big Jeff lit a match and started to burn them.

Big Jeff smiled as the cartons started to blaze. "I'm glad those empty fireworks cartons are REALLY empty!" Big Jeff said with a wide smile.

"Yes, Big Jeff! I emptied them with my own hands," Rinky's father said, as he turned away from the blaze.

Big Jeff stepped away to avoid the heat from the fire. "There were some mighty big firecrackers in those cartons. Sure would make a fine celebration!" he said.

Rinky's father frowned and said, "Don't you know shooting off fireworks is a complete waste of time, especially this year?"

Rinky and Big Jeff stepped further away from the cartons which were now blazing away. Father, who was quite close to the blaze, turned and looked at Big Jeff. "I don't want to hear any more about fireworks, Big Jeff!" he said.

KAA . . . BOOMM! A rocket shot right over father's head. He was so startled he didn't move a muscle. Suddenly the entire pile of burning cartons exploded. Skyrockets zoomed and exploded all over the Circle-O ranch. Loud explosions rocked the blacksmith's shop.

Rinky and Big Jeff fell flat on the ground. Rinky yelled, "Duck, Daddy!" Big Jeff rubbed a heavy hand over his face to hide a grin. He said, "Don't worry, Rinky! Daddy's safe! I reckon he's clear out of the county by now!"

Then, as suddenly as it started, the noise stopped. Rinky and Big Jeff stood up and looked around cautiously. "I don't see him!" Rinky said.

"Hey! Get me out of here!" a loud voice shouted from near the blacksmith's shop. They both ran quickly to the spot where the voice seemed to come from. Before either of them could move, Rinky's father splashed and spluttered his way out of the horse trough. Big Jeff was suddenly seized with a violent choking spell. He turned away and his body shook as he coughed and choked.

"Don't you dare laugh at me!" Rinky's father roared. Water was pouring out of his pockets and down his face from his hair. Rinky didn't say a word. Father started to walk heavily toward the ranch house. Then he put on his ten-gallon hat! SPLASH! The water from his big hat gushed all over him!

Rinky covered his face with both hands. Big Jeff couldn't help himself. He roared with laughter. Rinky's father disappeared into the ranch house without a word.

Later that day, Rinky's father stepped out of the ranch house, wearing dry clothing and a big smile. He walked over to Big Jeff and Rinky and said, "I reckon I looked mighty silly!"

Big Jeff started to mumble something about being sorry he laughed when a cowhand came galloping up to them at full speed. He leaped off his horse and shouted excitedly, "The herd's gone mad! They're stampeding for Dead Man's cliff. We can't stop 'em or even turn them! We'll lose the whole herd if we don't do somethin' right away!"

Rinky's father jumped on his horse and rode off toward Dead Man's cliff.

"Let's go help, Big Jeff!" Rinky shouted.

"Hold on, Rinky! It's going to take more than men on horseback to stop those charging cows! Hmmmm . . . I've got it!" shouted Big Jeff.

He ran into the blacksmith's shop and came out with a huge armful of rockets and firecrackers. "Grab some of these shootin' crackers, Rinky, and let's get going!" Big Jeff yelled, as he ran for his horse.

Minutes later, Rinky and Big Jeff were riding up to Rinky's father who was near the edge of Dead Man's cliff. "Get out of here! The cattle are coming this way!" shouted Rinky's father.

"They're coming fast!" yelled a cowboy, as he galloped away from the cliff to safety.

"We'll stop them!" Big Jeff said grimly. He quickly piled the fireworks in a big heap. Then he lit the fuse of a giant firecracker. In a flash they were all riding away from the cliff as the cattle thundered into sight. Straight for Dead Man's cliff they headed. BOOM! WHOOM! WHAM! BLAM! . . . went the fireworks.

At the very last minute the cattle turned and started milling in a circle. The stampede had been avoided!

"Wow!" shouted Rinky's father, as he pounded Big Jeff on the back. "You sure saved the day, Big Jeff!"

Big Jeff just smiled and winked at Rinky. "Oh, it wasn't anything! Anyway, I was just celebrating the 4th of July a little early this year!" grinned the cook of the Circle-O.
